

English language as an instrument of globalization

Amela Lukač Zoranić

International University in Novi Pazar, Novi Pazar, Serbia
prorektor.nastava@uninp.edu.rs

Fahreta Fijuljanin

International University in Novi Pazar, Novi Pazar, Serbia
fahretaf@hotmail.com

World globalization establishes new standards for foreign language skills as well as for the teachers of foreign languages. Market globalization represents one of the main factors that influenced English language to be international language. In order to have a successful interaction between foreign companies, market and economy felt a need for the knowledge of English language. In this way English language became a device, an instrument of successful management and the most useful second language. There was also the need to improve knowledge of English language in every company and business institutions. Increasing the number of English language speakers, we increase the international communication in an academic and business level.

Keywords: Globalization, English Language, Market, Business, Communication